This document was first published in 2012 and is periodically updated. Help protect yourself One of the best ways to protect your privacy and information is to take advantage of security features built into your Internet browser. In Microsoft Edge, you can choose to manage how private you are online. Block access to your web camera: By default, Microsoft Edge displays your web camera when someone is using your camera. You can choose to keep it private and not display it. Block access to your microphone: By default, Microsoft Edge shows your microphone when someone is using it. You can choose to keep it private and not display it. Block access to location: By default, Microsoft Edge shows your location when someone is using your location. You can choose to keep it private and not display it. Block access to your camera and microphone: To do this, right-click the screen and select Settings from the menu. Select the Privacy panel, and then select Block list of sites, contacts, and apps to access camera and microphone from. Choose how you're tracked: You can choose to be tracked and tell websites you visited so they can recognize you and customize the ads you see. To do this, right-click the screen and select Settings from the menu. Select the Personalization panel, and then choose to be tracked or not. Avoid trackers and social media: You can choose to limit the personal information you're sharing with sites you visit by blocking or limiting trackers and social media. To do this, right-click the screen and select Settings from the menu. Select the Personalization panel, and then choose to limit or block trackers and social media. When you sign in with your Microsoft account, it's possible that others will also use the same Microsoft account. This means that if you use your Microsoft account 82157476af
